

Targeting Foreign Corruption and Human Rights Violators in FY2019 Consolidated Appropriations

Introduction

The United States maintains several foreign policy tools to target foreign corruption and human rights violators. One of these is a visa ban, provided for in Section 7031(c) of the Department of State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2019 (SFOPs; P.L. 116-6; 8 U.S.C. 1182 note).

Section 7031(c) requires the Secretary of State to make foreign officials and their immediate family members ineligible for U.S. entry if there is credible evidence that such individuals “have been involved in significant corruption, including corruption related to the extraction of natural resources, or a gross violation of human rights.” A pending U.S. visa application need not exist. Section 7031(c) does not invoke the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) and states that, for the purposes of this section, decisions regarding U.S. entry eligibility are not to be considered confidential. In contrast, Section 222(f) of the INA (8 U.S.C. 1182(f)) states that, in general, State Department records pertaining to the issuance or refusal of U.S. visas or permits are confidential.

The origins of Section 7031(c) can be traced to FY2008 appropriations, when Congress sought to identify and make ineligible for U.S. entry foreign kleptocrats whose alleged corruption involved the extraction of natural resources (see Figure 1). Beginning in FY2012, Congress enacted a broader provision that addressed “significant corruption” in general as well as corruption related to natural resources extraction. In FY2014, Congress expanded the provision to target foreign officials involved in “a gross violation of human rights.” In FY2015, Congress further clarified that designations pursuant to Section 7031(c) may be made publicly or privately.

Key Elements of Section 7031(c) in the FY2019 Consolidated Appropriations Act

Who may be found ineligible for U.S. entry? Foreign corrupt officials and their immediate family members.

What derogatory activity triggers a designation? Significant corruption, including corruption related to natural resources extraction, or a gross violation of human rights.

Are designations confidential? The Secretary of State may designate individuals publicly or privately, but consular records pertaining to the refusal or approval of U.S. entry for designated individuals are not to be considered confidential.

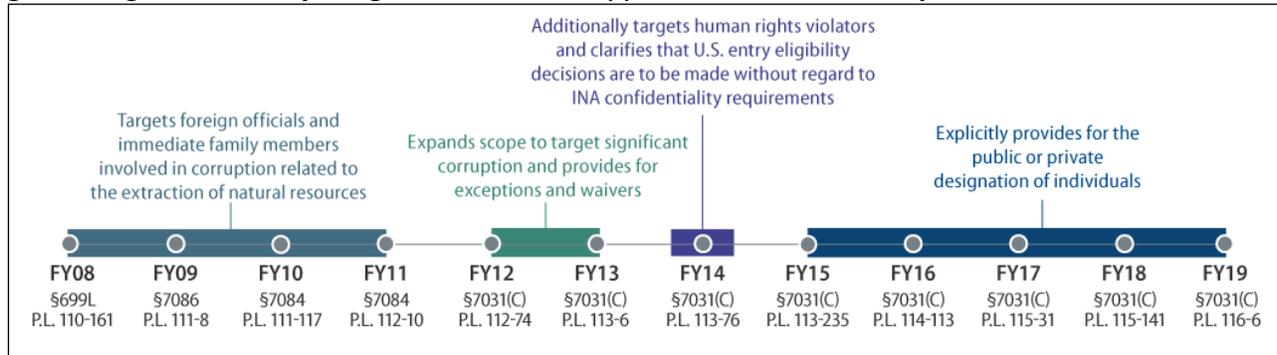

Who cannot be designated? Exceptions to Section 7031(c) include those whose entry would further important U.S. law enforcement objectives or whose entry is required to fulfill U.S. obligations under the United Nations (U.N.) Headquarters Agreement, which requires the United States to allow entry to those who are sent by their government to attend U.N. meetings.

Who may be permitted into the United States, despite a designation? The Secretary of State may waive restrictions for compelling national interest reasons or because circumstances that caused the designation have sufficiently changed.

How does Congress conduct oversight of Section 7031(c)'s implementation? The Secretary of State is required to submit a report to the Committees on Appropriations and on the Judiciary not later than 6 months from enactment (due August 15, 2019), describing its use during the previous 12 months and whether any exceptions or waivers were invoked. Unclassified portions of the report are required to be posted on the State Department website. The prior report, required by FY2018 appropriations, was issued on December 10, 2018.

When does the requirement end? Section 7031(c) will end on September 30, 2019, unless extended by a continuing resolution or restated in a new law. H.R. 2740, which contains FY2020 SFOPs and passed the House in June 2019, would extend Section 7031(c) into FY2020.

Figure I. Legislative History: Origins of Section 7031(c) and Evolution of Its Scope, FY2008-FY2019

Source: CRS, based on legislation available on Congress.gov.

Public Designations

Although the State Department has been authorized to publicly designate individuals pursuant to 7031(c) since FY2015 appropriations, the first such designation occurred in February 2018; since then, dozens more have been publicly listed (see Table 1). In its December 2018 report to Congress on 7031(c) implementation, the State Department indicated that some of these designations were not new but rather reflected a change from a previously private to a now public designation.

Table 1. Public Designations Under 7031(c)

Country	Name	Position	Reason
Albania	Tom Doshi	Member of parliament	C
Albania	Adriatik Lalla	Prosecutor	C
Bosnia and Herzegovina	Nikola Spiric	House of rep.	C
Democratic Republic of the Congo	5 individuals ^a	Election, legislative, judicial officials	C
Dominican Republic	Felix Ramon Bautisa Rosario ^b	Senator	C
The Gambia	Yahya Jammeh ^b	Former president	HR
Guatemala	Aida Stalling Davila	Former supreme court magistrate	C
Nicaragua	Roberto Jose Rivas Reyes ^b	President of supreme electoral council	C
Russia	Muslim Khuchiev	Chairman of Chechen Republic	HR
Saudi Arabia	16 individuals ^{a,b}	Not specified ^c	HR
Serbia	Goran Radosavljevic	Not specified	HR

Source: U.S. Department of State.

Notes: C = corruption, HR = human rights. Positions are as described in the relevant designation announcement. Designations highlighted in blue pertain to:

- a. Names omitted for space reasons.
- b. These individuals were also designated pursuant to the Global Magnitsky Act.
- c. Individuals implicated in Jamal Khashoggi murder.

7031(c) vs. Global Magnitsky Sanctions

In addition to Section 7031(c), foreign kleptocrats and human rights violators may be subject to U.S. visa restrictions under Executive Order 13818, which was issued pursuant to the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act (P.L. 114-328; 22 U.S.C. 2656 note). Global Magnitsky sanctions, however, differ from Section 7031(c) designations. All individuals designated pursuant to E.O. 13818 are publicly identified and subject to economic sanctions as well as visa restrictions. By contrast, the Secretary of State can either publicly or privately designate individuals pursuant to 7031(c) and all 7031(c) designations are made without the concurrent imposition of economic sanctions. Section 7031(c) designations can also target family members of foreign kleptocrats and human rights violators, while Global Magnitsky designations are limited to those who directly or indirectly engaged in acts of corruption or human rights abuse. There are some instances of individuals having been designated under both 7031(c) and Global Magnitsky (see Table 1).

Other Visa Restrictions

Human rights violators and corrupt actors may also be subject to visa restrictions under Section 212 of the INA, which provides broad executive branch authority to block entry in service of U.S. interests and foreign policy. Included among the grounds for U.S. visa ineligibility and admission are conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, participation in genocide, commission of acts of torture or extrajudicial killings, particularly severe violations of religious freedom, significant trafficking in persons, and recruitment and use of child soldiers.

To combat kleptocracy, Presidential Proclamation (PP) 7750 of January 12, 2004 may be used to suspend U.S. entry of foreign public officials engaged in bribery, corruption, misappropriation of public funds, or interference with judicial, electoral, or other public processes that results in serious adverse effects on U.S. national interests. PP7750 draws on authority pursuant to Section 212(f) of the INA. Alien spouses, children, and dependent household members who are beneficiaries of corruption are also ineligible for U.S. entry. To target human rights violators, PP8697 of August 4, 2011, may be used to suspend U.S. entry of aliens who participated in serious human rights and humanitarian law violations.

Several additional country-specific visa bans are in effect, due in part to human rights concerns. From time to time, the President has also used national emergency authorities to sanction foreign corrupt actors or human rights violators.

PP8693 of July 24, 2011 suspended U.S. entry of aliens subject to International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) sanctions and U.N. Security Council travel bans. Congress has also enacted statutes that restrict U.S. entry for individuals from specific countries.

Policy Outlook

Members of Congress may seek to evaluate the value of Section 7031(c) as a policy tool, compare its implementation to other anticorruption and human rights programs, and consider whether 7031(c) provisions should be codified (as noted above, H.R. 2740 would extend the provisions for another fiscal year). Potentially relevant questions include, In what instances might concurrent application of Global Magnitsky sanctions bolster the impact of 7031(c) designations? Similarly, are there instances in which Global Magnitsky sanctions should be supplemented by Section 7031(c) designations, which can additionally reach family members of those engaged in significant corruption or a gross violation of human rights? How are U.S. bilateral relations affected by the designation of high-level officials?

Liana W. Rosen, Specialist in International Crime and Narcotics

Michael A. Weber, Analyst in Foreign Affairs

IF10905

Disclaimer

This document was prepared by the Congressional Research Service (CRS). CRS serves as nonpartisan shared staff to congressional committees and Members of Congress. It operates solely at the behest of and under the direction of Congress. Information in a CRS Report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to Members of Congress in connection with CRS's institutional role. CRS Reports, as a work of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS Report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS Report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.